

Jan Frich is the Executive Director of the Division for Health Services at the Norwegian Institute of Public Health. He is also a professor of health services research and medicine at the Institute of Health and Society at the University of Oslo with academic interests in clinical leadership, health care work force, patient experience, and quality of care. He has previously been the Chief Medical Officer of the South-Eastern Norway Regional Health Authority, academic director of the University of Oslo's executive master's program in health administration and attending neurologist at Oslo University Hospital. Frich holds a M.D., Ph.D., and M.H.A. from the University of Oslo and M.Sc. from Brunel University in London.